FOREST FIRES RAGE DURING DRY SPELL

Great Damage Done in Northern Neck—Valuable Timber Destroyed.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Lancaster, Va., April 16.—During the recent dry spell forest fires played havoc in some parts of the Northern Neck. Last Saturday a fire broke out at Luttrell's sawmill, in the southern part of Richmond county, near the line separating that county from Lancaster and Northumberland, and raged for several days, till it was extinguished by the rain. A high wind was prevailing when the fire broke out, and continued for several days, driving the flames with irresistible force through the dense forests. Hundreds of people turned out to fight the flames, but all efforts to stay them proved unavailing till the rain began to fall.

Maon Baptist Chapel, a barn belonging to Frank Settle, and a small barn of Alvin Thomas, all in Richmond county, were destroyed. At one time it was thought that Marion Grove camp ground, the great Methodist summer resort, in this section, with its great tabernacle and its hundred cottages, would be devoured by the flames, but scores of men, under the leadership of Andrew Jones, managed by great efforts to save the historic encampment, which was rendered famous by the preaching of Bishop Doeggett, James A. Duncan, Leonidas Rossier, John E. Edwards and other great preachers of the Methodist Church. It is estimated that many miles of fencing and several thousand acres of timber were destroyed. There were smaller forest fires in other sections, notably in Lancaster and Northumberland, and every night during the first part of the week the horizon was lighted up with the glare of burning forests. It is impossible at present to estimate the damage done by these fires, but some people have taken steps to have the damages estimated, with a view to bringing suits against the persons by whose acts the fires were started.
